Its creator, Mark Costello, grew up in a commune, for example, but found religion more to his taste. "I'm not a socialist," he explains, "but I believe in freedom of choice, and I didn't believe in the system." "It's about getting past the limited view we have of the world. The world is much larger than our little box." Coastal communities with industry often struggle to protect their economic future. In New Castle County, Delaware, for example, where income per capita is low, the top industries in the local economy are prisons, foundations and casinos. "It's not so much about casinos, but about the culture, and the fact that you can't escape it," Costello observes. "When we saw the tax revenues drop, we thought we had to find another way. Things will only change if you change them." Costello, who has a degree in electrical engineering, helps manage a low-cost housing construction project in Brooklyn, New York, that has enlisted nearly 100 people from the local housing authority. All of them were recently laid off; some needed time to move. (It's not easy to find a good job in New York when
