Various methods are known for extracting sap from the stalks of sugar cane, i.e. from the sugar cane cossettes produced by the harvesting of sugar cane. For instance, it is known that the juices, formed inside the cossettes during the processing of the sugar cane, are drained from the cossettes by pressing, as a result of which the sugar cane cossettes, on being detached from the sugar cane stem, collapse and discharge their juice into an under surface space of the sugar cane
