Gel adsorptive affinity purification of a GPI-linked protein covalently linked to a phosphatidylinositol anchor. A lipid anchor has been added to a protein of interest at the C-terminus, and the three-dimensional structure of this protein has been studied by NMR spectroscopy. We have developed a method for the purification of this anchor-protein conjugate by gel adsorptive affinity chromatography. The glycosyl phosphatidylinositol anchor is linked to the protein through a 4,4-bis(5'-aminopentyl)-fluorobenzene tag. The linkage has minimal effect on the structure of the protein and permits purification by affinity chromatography. The method is rapid, inexpensive, and does not require extensive sample preparation. We can selectively purify the protein of interest from a protein mixture containing at least two proteins, one of which is attached to the protein of interest.

They formed a pool of sorts, made up of overlapping parts that only moved together as a whole. The shape was identical to the half sphere that her hands had become moments ago. They moved away from her shoulders, bringing her elbows and knees into close proximity. As the hands parted, Mirriam's head fell back, allowing her neck to relax. The open mouth of a mug pulled down towards her belly. The hands continued to move, the movement pulled in on itself to create the pool, pushing the mouth of the mug away. With her hands covering her belly, Mirriam couldn't catch the falling mug. She pressed her hands into her belly and concentrated on not reacting. But it was difficult. There was a need that was hard to focus on, a pressure. It went to her stomach, her cheeks. It pulled her eyes towards her knees, drawing tears down her cheeks. "Mirriam?" Mirriam focused on the voices. They were familiar, but unlike her own voice, there was only one of them and she'd heard it many times. "Can you hear me? You need to relax." Mirriam's eyes were drawn to the fallen mug. It was near to her feet, it didn't look to be a match to the mug that had been set down in her desk. Her fingers reached for it and she flinched. Her hands pulled away from her belly, pulling the hands
