You can create interactive album and share your beautiful photo collection with your friends and families. With the right training, you can regain control over your emotions when things get out of hand. Interview by Dustin Mills | Photography by Josh Topolsky Emotional Intelligence is something many of us take for granted. I know I have a hard time when I feel overwhelmed by a mood swing or angry outburst. However, for athletes it can be critical because emotions can make or break the performance. When the emotion part gets out of control it can cause imbalances in the body's performance. Too much adrenaline, too much cortisol, too much lactic acid - there are a host of imbalances caused by the roller coaster ride of emotions. While many of the emotional imbalances can be self-correcting, some require more advanced techniques, such as a coach, mentor or a sports psychologist. Sports psychologists and coaches have learned a lot about helping athletes control and manage their emotions and have developed tools to help athletes manage their emotions. Brad Hermann works with athletes of all ages and has several decades of experience working with athletes of all levels. He is the Founder and Director of the Sports Psychology Clinic, a mental performance training and education facility. Hermann believes "the emotional arena requires the most conscious and deliberate level of guidance, management, and application of the skills of self-awareness, self-regulation, and self-regulation. Without these skills we become internally blind to our emotional patterns." Hermann also said that "Athletes become lost when they feel ashamed, attacked, isolated, or inferior. When athletes sense injury, humiliation, or perceived defeat, they enter an emotional tailspin that can result in a meltdown and a compromised performance." This is when athletes need to be trained to detect early signs of emotions like excitement, nervousness, anger, tension, frustration, and fear. The crucial step is to be able to recognise and understand those emotions in the moment. Once the athlete knows they are feeling an emotion or before the emotion takes over they need to be able to redirect the emotion into a positive direction and not let it get out of control. The athlete needs to assess their emotions using the 15 Second Rule. This means assess the emotion for only 15 seconds b7e8df5c8

View Larger I recently found this great tool and it's free! It's called 'Spotify Photo Manager'. The best way to explain this tool is if you were to add the Spotify app to your iPad and it allowed you to add one or more of your songs to an album. You can add the app by going to iTunes and following the instructions. If this is all done correctly, you will have access to the Spotify Photo Manager App. Once you have installed the app, you will be able to add both your pictures AND music to your albums. If you

What's New in the?

What are you going to use this for? I'd look around the net and see if there's a tool to do this. There are many of these around, I think some are free, some aren't. What they all have in common is they are not free. And if you don't have a lot of time to save to make it look cool - then there's no point. If you have the time, I'd go on the web and do some research. Just a suggestion... isn't there a program that lets you take quick screencaps from any program you like? I've never tried it, but was thinking there's a way to take a "grab" of a window program and have it easily put on a page in a book. I downloaded the trial version and it's good so far. It doesn't have enough features for me yet but I will work on adding them in the future. If you are interested, you should take a look at the current version that I am in the process of porting. If I could just test to make sure that the flipbook and the import of the photos would work, I have a digital "million dollar" balance and would love to test it and see what it does. I might be willing to buy the program, depending on the accuracy of the trial version. I also installed FlipAlbum Designer and the editor for 3D objects. I'm actually surprised that there isn't a free version of it, but since it's not there, here's a shot of the control panel of FlipAlbum Designer. This is what it looks like when you create a new object in the 3D editor, but you need to select the "bulk" option from the control panel to do so. FlipAlbum Designer is free, but the "bulk" option isn't, so you will need to pay if you want to create a lot of objects (unless you have a lot of time and money to burn!). The process of creating the flipbook is very similar to creating a flipbook using the 1st version of FlipAlbum. In fact, the process is even simpler and more visual - there are no overlays or animations - it's just like selecting any picture that you want to be part of the flipbook. You can go into the gallery to select a photo that you want to include in your flipbook, or just use the "browse" tool to select a photo from
